After 10 years of double digit GDP growth, Chinas economy has begun to slow down, and its political power is transitioning to new leadership. In spite of that there are still many great business opportunities for small companies in various industries to add China to their list of customers. The growth of imports from the United States in many key sectors, such as energy, chemicals, transportation, medical equipment, construction, machinery and a range of services, suggests that China will remain an important and viable market for a wide range of products and services.

Highlights include:

- * Overview of Chinas current market
- * Challenges and opportunities of doing business in China
- * Options for entering the China market
- * Resources available to assist your business including Department of Commerce Commercial Services and the MBDC Research Library

Presenters:

- * Li Yanling, Deputy Director of Administration Commission of Beijing Tianzhu Free Trade Zone
- * Liu Xianming, Director of Administrative Center of Software Park,
The Administrative Commission of Tianjin Binhai Hi-Tech Industrial Development Area
- * David Leister, Project Manager of MBDA Global Business Center
